Roblox is a cloud-based gaming system that is widely used by a user-driven community of over 120 million monthly active users. It's free to play, but gamers can earn Robux by completing quests and by spending real money on game content through in-game stores called Snapzones. Robux is the main currency in Roblox, and it can be used to buy game content or to purchase an annual subscription for Robux and in-game items. Roblox's three different revenue models allow Roblox developers to sustain their work without ever having to ask a player for money or ever asking a publisher for payment. Roblox games are coded in a game development language called Lua and are created using a drag-and-drop visual programming interface. Players and developers can use tools in the Roblox Studio to create games, define rules, program game logic, and build game experiences. The core feature of Roblox is its virtual environment, where players create and develop their own games from scratch using coding and visual design elements, which are then uploaded to the platform and accessible to other users. Kids around the world can also use Roblox to play games made by other users in the platform's large community and support each other in the development of their games. Roblox can be accessed by a variety of devices, including desktop computers, mobile phones, and tablets. It is available in 12 languages, but the most popular of those are English and Spanish. A user can access Roblox via the website or through a mobile app. Roblox allows players to create their own games using a visual programming interface, which is similar to Scratch. The user can build a game using blocks, scripts, characters, and animations. Roblox allows players to create games for almost any platform, including smartphones, desktop computers, web browsers, and Google Cast-enabled devices. Roblox has over 500 million games created or published by third-party developers. Its game catalog includes blockbuster franchises and games that utilize new technologies, including e-sports and augmented reality. History: Based in San Francisco, California, Roblox was founded by Rob LeFebvre, Eric Cassel, and David Baszucki. LeFebvre, Cassel, and Baszucki met in college and started coding together while they were students at the University of Michigan. LeFebvre had previously done Flash and Actionscript development for Disney and DreamWorks Animation in the 1990
