Roblox, a sandbox video game development platform owned by the company Roblox Corporation, was created by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel in May 2004, with a view towards "empowering kids to become programmers, by programming games". Starting out as a game-creating platform that would be free to use, but where users would be given small virtual gifts of Robux, Roblox Corporation declared in April 2005 that the platform would cease to be free. The platform developed new features over the years, including the ability to place items inside other items, the ability to have games that have a single person in the game, and more. Roblox received little attention until early 2007, when a Roblox user group called "The Playroom" made a video game called "Roblox" and posted a note announcing its release. The game gained popularity, and a larger user group took its name. Roblox continued to evolve, gaining more features and eventually playing a larger role in the online gaming landscape.[1][2] By 2008, the number of games on the Roblox website had increased to 2,120, and the number of active user accounts had increased to more than a million.[3] In March 2009, there were over two million active user accounts on the site, which exceeded the number of active players for the entire site for the previous year.[4] In 2010, Roblox launched a public beta for a new Android app, allowing other developers to create games for the Android platform. Many popular Roblox games have made their way to the Android platform, including several of the hit Roblox series such as SlugQuest and the Food Fight game series. This beta release also introduced a service that allowed users to make in-game purchases for Robux with real-world money through an additional in-game currency called "Bloxes". The game maker had long been a beta program for users, and the Robux virtual currency had been created to allow Roblox users to spend their virtual gifts to perform game-related actions.[5] Roblox is developed using the programming language Lua, and Roblox is currently the largest free-to-play website that uses a programming language. By 2018, over 50 games were being developed on a monthly basis, with the number of games generally increasing with each version of Roblox.[6][7][8][9] Users can create their own games using a drag-and-drop interface,
