Originally from Germany, David Baszucki began developing his Roblox studio in the United States in 2004. In 2005, Roblox released its first game called "Roblox Adventures", a platform game that allowed users to build their own worlds. This game was a success among the platform community and attracted over 75,000 users in the first few days after launch. Roblox continued to develop similar games, and in 2006 released "Roblox Studio". Roblox Studio allowed users to create their own games and share them online, and it became the first true game creation tool for user-made games. Roblox allowed users to create various types of games from 2D to 3D, and this variety of games attracted many new users to Roblox. By January 2007, Roblox had over 100,000 monthly users, and developers had added about 10,000 games. This growth continued and the platform surpassed 1 million monthly users in January 2007, and 1.5 million in September 2008. This growth continued, and at the end of 2008, Roblox had over 2.5 million monthly users. By April 2009, Roblox had over 3.6 million monthly users. Users on Roblox could share games with friends and enemies and use the platform's chat system to communicate with other users. A new "Roblox TV" section was released in February 2009 that allowed users to watch videos created by other users. This enabled many kids to create educational videos. The popularity of Roblox continued, and by 2011, its monthly users had grown to 7.9 million, and that year Roblox surpassed 10 million monthly users. Roblox had more than 15 million monthly users as of January 2012, and users could view 2.5 million videos through the Roblox TV section. Roblox held its first Roblox Studios Event in April 2012 at the Game Developers Conference, where many game developers from various games, such as Minecraft, The Sims Online, and The Curse of Blackwood Hall, presented their games. Roblox faced many challenges. As more and more users were attracted to the platform, more and more games were being made, and in April 2012, Roblox users could play more than half of the games on the website. Roblox had a major upgrade in June 2012, and this upgrade allowed new users to create their own games. This brought an explosion in popularity, with 50,000 new users joining in
