Actin is an important therapeutic target in pathologies such as cystic fibrosis and osteoporosis. In vivo, actin polymerizes and depolymerizes to perform a variety of functions in cells and tissues. Actin may assemble into structures such as stress fibers, focal adhesions, and cell-cell junctions. Actin also forms filaments that participate in cell motility and intracellular trafficking. In vivo, the barbed (+) end of actin filaments is capped by the actin-binding proteins, while the pointed (-) end is capped by a complex of capping protein and gelsolin. The best studied functions of actin involve its role as a component of muscle. The myosin-actin complex is the contractile unit of muscle cells, and can be divided into two main parts. The myosin portion of the complex consists of two heavy chains, two essential light chains and two regulatory light chains. The actin portion of the complex consists of three highly homologous, globular actins, which form a hexameric ring in 2d92ce491b
