Nearly three quarters of households have made changes to their household portfolio in response to the current economic climate. Only a quarter of the people surveyed were confident that house prices will rise again in the coming year. Ralph Ballard, director of survey research at Halifax, said: "Households have made changes to their household portfolio to meet current economic pressures and it is not surprising that more people are switching from buying to renting. This is typical of what we have seen in many countries around the world. The fact that nearly three quarters of households have changed their household portfolio is important to note, because it indicates that the large amount of debt that is riddled throughout the UK. It is likely to be the main reason

Q: In Windows 10 how to remove or hide recent apps from taskbar In Windows 7 I used to be able to simply drag the Recent Applications item off of the taskbar. Now I can't get it to work. Is there a way to remove the Recent Apps from Windows 10 taskbar? A: Windows 10 Anniversary edition can't be rooted to remove the Recent Apps like Windows 7. You can't disable the Recent Apps on Windows 10. Since you already know how to remove the task bar, I will suggest you to use application called Search tools and options, which basically removes the recent apps from the taskbar.

Q: JavaScript confirm dialog problem I am using the following JavaScript confirm dialog to remove a row from a grid. `if(confirm("Do you really want to delete the row?")) { ... }` But my problem is, sometimes, when I have multiple rows on the screen, I get an alert box instead of a confirm dialog box. How can I make it work? I am using IE7. A:

Confirm is a function of the browser window, not the browser. If you want the user to confirm each action, you should put your confirm dialog into its own function.

function confirm(str) { if (window.confirm(str)) return true; else return false; }

For example: `// User presses OK if (confirm("Do you really want to delete the row?")) { // delete row }` However, since you didn't want the user to confirm each action, I think your approach is correct. The second argument to confirm is the message for the dialog. It is passed by the browser, and doesn't exist outside of it, which is why you're getting that alert.

Some Intel chips might be vulnerable to Spectre, Spectre 2 attack We have reported about the presence of the security flaws “Spectre” and “Spectre 2” in various processors in recent times, but it appears that there are other chips that have also been targeted by hackers. The two bugs are very similar, and they were discovered by an Israeli security researcher Aviel Dabag. According to him, the technology used by some of the chips may be the reason for the vulnerabilities. He said:
