The $22.5 million garage will be built inside a yard of the former Union Bank building at 2800-2400 Woodward Ave. The garage will be enclosed from the street and parking will be available inside the structure. The garage is part of the $3.5 billion Downtown Airport District plan, and the city worked with DTE Energy Center and the Detroit Regional Transit Authority on the project. The plan is to construct the garage in phases over the next five years. The new garage is scheduled to be ready by mid-2018, the city said. "We are taking an innovative approach to solving a longstanding parking issue in the heart of downtown Detroit," Mayor Mike Duggan said in a statement. "The downtown bus terminal will be in use and fully operational during construction of the new garage, so the community and visitors will continue to be able to access the facility for vehicle and pedestrian traffic. "We hope that giving citizens new options and better choice in parking will encourage them to shop, eat and live downtown." The city is working with the Downtown Development Authority to determine the exact costs of the new garage and will need to work with the authority again to make improvements to the street if the city is able
