The postoperative surgical patient is at increased risk of atrial fibrillation (AF), a common arrhythmia. A standardised electronic handover communication via the electronic health record (EHR) after the patient returns from surgery can reduce postoperative complications and is a candidate for implementation. We evaluated the impact of an electronic handover message exchange system on clinical outcomes. The 2-year period from 01/01/2016 to 31/12/2017 was retrospectively assessed. Data on clinical and structural characteristics were abstracted from the EHR and collected from each institution's cardiology service. A total of 45,205 admissions were included. The implementation of an EHR-based electronic handover message exchange in our institution began in July 2016. The mean age of the patient population was 66.4 years; 60.4% were men. The mean systolic blood pressure was 138.3 mmHg and diastolic blood pressure 74.4 mmHg. Congestive heart failure was present in 10.8% and valvular heart disease in 9.8%. The in-hospital mortality rate was 2.6% and the mortality rate 30 days after discharge was 4.9%. After the implementation of EHR-based electronic handover message exchange, the occurrence of new AF within 30 days after surgery was reduced from 9.4% to 7.5% (p = 0.006). This reduction was more pronounced in patients with valvular heart disease (p = 0.02) and in patients with moderate renal failure (p = 0.01). The number of postoperative AF-related admissions to the cardiology service increased from 10.5% to 18.2% (p Epiteo-specific humoral and cellular immune response to an oligomannose-type N

Runs applications and controls the keyboard's functions, using the keyboard's on-screen display and touchpad. Even if it's not a laptop, the fact that you have a Mac doesn't mean you can't use it to perform the most basic of tasks. Entertaining and fun, the keyboard of a Mac can really help with productivity when it comes to creating documents, spreadsheets or presentations. In fact, almost everything you need to perform everyday tasks can be done on a keyboard of a Mac, but there are also more sophisticated ways to get a Mac to do things for you. This is where KMR comes in. KMR is the only Mac application which allows you to use Mac accessories - like the keyboard - without the need for a USB dongle. This is possible due to the fact that this program is able to detect the type of keyboard connected to the computer and automatically configure its settings so that it can work with the device. The program also allows you to change the keyboard's input language and enable special keyboard features - like macro recording. Working with the keyboard of a Mac can be complicated, as you have to know which kind of keyboard and which kind of keys are used. KMR makes it much easier by displaying the most common Mac keycaps on a graphic layout. This way, you can easily see what kind of keys are being pressed and what the Mac keyboard has to offer. More than just an app for Mac, KMR is a smart device manager, as it offers users a way to get a Mac to remember previous setups and to resume applications started from a USB drive. Apart from keycaps and layouts, users can also use KMR to choose from numerous Mac profiles, each one containing different special keys - like the GoToHome key. With KMR, you can customize the Mac keyboard in any way you see fit.
