A: I get the output you see above when I test the sample input you provided in the question. I get the following error: Traceback (most recent call last): File "test.py", line 5, in count_strings(input) File "/Users/jen/Documents/test.py", line 1, in count_strings count_strings(input) File "test.py", line 4, in count_strings print(len(input[i])) TypeError: 'int' object is not callable This is because your input is a single integer in the first place. Using the following input works just fine: input = [1,2,3,4,5] You could try this instead: from collections import Counter def count_strings(input): return Counter(input) print(count_strings(input)) He was John Dory. "I loved everything about the old Morris," he said. "I have a new Morris, but I don't miss the old one. I loved the country around us. I loved the market, the radio and the chocolate that comes from the pastures. We gave the quality of life to our owners and the cows; now I think we should stop giving their lives to us." I do not have a halo, not yet. "I'm not a saint." I would have said if anyone had asked. I have a plan for the future of the country. I want to end the cowboy-free-for-all in Australia, so that the farmers and the animals can spend their lives doing what they are meant to do, and they can do that because they are no longer in debt. If I have a halo, it is the result of study, sometimes little more than a restless five years of research into the minds of cattle and people. Mostly, I am the product of long days on the paddock with Bob, our dogs, with my father, with people who think as I do, who listen, who put the future of the nation before their own needs and desires. Like many farmers I once made the conscious decision to give up working full time. I was in debt, even though my father and his father before him were farmers; the business that pays the mortgage was 54b84cb42d
