* Beginning Lightroom: We cover the basics of getting acquainted with the basics of the Lightroom workflow and using the Basic and Develop modules. Adobe offers a couple of online tutorials that are helpful if you're just getting into the program: * Lightroom Online Training: This online class covers the most common tasks in Lightroom, including managing catalogs, using brushes and presets, applying edits, using the Fix tool, and so on. * Adobe Photoshop Lightroom 5: This live training on its own is pretty good but is designed for intermediate or advanced photogs. It includes an hour-long overview of Lightroom, as well as a tour of the editing tools and other features. The course is also a bit advanced, with a ton of real-world editing challenges to complete. * Adobe Photoshop Lightroom 6: This live training on its own is pretty good but is designed for intermediate or advanced photogs. It includes an hour-long overview of Lightroom, as well as a tour of the editing tools and other features. The course also comes with a one-hour review of Photoshop. The review can be carried out online or on your Mac or PC. This course is highly recommended for experienced Lightroom users who want to get their hands dirty with Photoshop. * * * # The Photoshop Dictionary As you work with Photoshop, you'll be making many common modifications. The following list of words and terms will be useful in understanding what you're doing and what you're selecting in your images. * Black & white: This refers to the grayscale image mode in which you see an image with all the available shades of gray, from the darkest to the lightest. * Blur: In our images and our computers, we can only measure distances in real-world units – such as inches or millimeters. When we enter pixels in Photoshop, however, that's really a distance in the screen space of the pixels on the monitor. So, what you're doing when you apply a blur is that you apply a digital lens to the image. By adding pixel blur, you add a blurring lens to the image. The blur you add to an image can be from zero pixels, which is called no blur, to many pixels, which is called too much blur. * Brightness & Contrast: This is the only real way to significantly change the relative

Q: Clojure - print or println in a specific subroutine Sorry for such a silly question. Hi, I have a function call that I use to test new threading functionality. I would like to print out some output that occurs only in this subroutine. (defn thread-run "get the new pthread and run asynchronously returns a future with result of thread" ([subroutine] (future (subroutine))) (print "calling from main") (println "called from main, has finished running") (thread-run 'user/foo) Of course, this code will only print the output in the very first future call. In other words, how do I get it to print "called from main has finished running" if and only if I call the thread-run function? Thanks, Brett A: Try the macro with let to capture the value and use it in the println and :note println : (println (let [val 'called from main has finished running] `~val)) (:note println) Sunday, October 23, 2008 In last month's report on file sharing, we concluded that the best and most realistic way to get rid of music sharing was to convince people to pay for the content they consume. I'm thinking that we shouldn't get too carried away with this idea, simply because it's a bit like trying to stop people from stealing books or art by criminalizing the act of taking it out of the library or gallery. If there was no profit motive involved (i.e., you could not sell the art to make a profit), then it would make more sense for the government to do something about theft. " ", "

History The parish was established in the nineteenth century by Archbishop Michael Corrigan when the new parish was dedicated on December 18, 1885. The parish church, dedicated to St. Clare of Assisi, was designed by the noted Chicago architectural firm of Byrne and Swinford. The foundation stone was laid in 1890, and the church was completed in 1892; it was dedicated on May 25 of that year. The parish church sustained damage from a fire in 1947, and reconstruction followed, with completion of the new church in 1956. A central feature of the new church was the crucifix, which was designed by sculptor Hermann Schreiber and cast in bronze by the French artist Gustave Eiffel. Eiffel cast the five sculptures of the crucifix, representing Christ and his disciples, in Paris; it arrived in Chicago on December 23, 1911. Eiffel also cast the altar and reredos in the church. The property that housed the church was purchased in the 1930s by Edward G. Wortendyke, a member of the Illinois Assembly and Illinois senator. The property became a public housing project in the 1940s; the parish moved to its new home at 5560 S. Lunt Avenue in 1943. In the 2000s, the parish gained national recognition for its service to the community. The parish raised money for victims of the September 11 attacks in 2001 and the 2004 tsunami and for victims of the 2004 South Asia earthquake. In 2007, the pastor
